Authors often write things that resonate and linger in the reader's mind as significant. These quotes might be selected because they offer outstanding descriptions, give deeper insight into a character, foreshadow an upcoming problem, represent an important moment in the story, or represent a moment when you personally felt connected to the story or a character. (think about the use of sticky notes as a strategy to mark these significant quotes as you read and make your selections after you complete your reading.*) When you write, think of how you can help others develop an appreciation for the rich language in your samples. Write to explain five (5) quotes in no more than one concise paragraph each. You may recreate this format and type your response or handwrite your responses in this format; there is not sufficient space on this form to thoughtfully complete this activity.
